You NEVER CAN TELL!

CHUBBY WAS JUST about the plumpiest squirrel in Leafy Forest, and he had exactly the warm, friendly disposition to go with his looks. As he strolled along a quiet lane, he smiled at the pretty flowers, waved to the birds flying overhead and hummed a jolly tune.

"Good morning, good morning!" said a hearty voice right behind him.

Chubby turned to see a wolf smiling at him and offering him a handshake. "I'm a stranger in Leafy Forest," said the wolf. "My name's Walter Wolf and I've just moved to these parts. To tell you the truth, I'm a bit lonesome for friendly company, since I don't know a soul around here!"

Naturally, Chubby's kind heart was moved at once. "I'm Chubby Squirrel," he replied, returning the handshake, "and I'm glad to offer you my friendship." Chubby, you see, was so soft-hearted, that he couldn't bear to think of anyone's being without friends!

"Oh, would you?" Walter Wolf's smile was wider than ever. "Then I wonder if you would care to pay me a visit? I haven't had any visitors in my new den...er...house...and it seems so empty to me!"

To this Chubby agreed at once. He trotted happily by the side of the wolf, telling him all about Leafy Forest. "It's a grand place to live," he said, "and after a short time, you'll have ever so many friends!"

"I certainly hope so," returned the wolf. "Ah, here is my house! Won't you come in?"

Chubby willingly stepped inside and the door closed with a crash behind him. It was then, for the first time, that Chubby felt a little uneasy. Why had the wolf slammed the door shut? And why was it so dark in the house? And why was the wolf smiling at him now, with a smile that was no longer friendly but cunning and sly?

"I would offer you some refreshment," said the wolf, "but you see, I haven't any! In fact, that's the reason I asked you home with me! You're going to be the refreshment in this house!"

As Chubby looked at the white fangs snapping at him, he realized that all was lost! The wolf had pretended friendliness only to lure him to his doom. What chance did a small squirrel have against those gnashing teeth that were coming closer and closer and closer...

"Hssssss...hssssss"

What was that new sound? And who...or what...was making it?

"No, no, no!" Walter Wolf yelled as he saw the snake sliding towards him, heard it hiss a threat of destruction. But no matter how he yelled, the snake came towards him, gliding without any other sound than the deadly hiss.

"Help! Let me out of here!" Walter Wolf shrieked, throwing the door open and running out of the house and down the road. "Help!"

Chubby could hear his cries getting softer and softer as the wolf ran further and further away. "He's gone, all right!" said the snake.

"Oh!" As Chubby looked at the snake, he felt fear too, and started to back off.

"My, you have a lot to learn," the snake said softly. "Don't you know now that you never can tell by appearances? Because the wolf smiled at you, you thought he was a friend. And you're scared of me, though I'm just a harmless little garter snake!"

"And a real friend," said Chubby. "You never can tell, can you?"

CATS 'N' DOGS!

THE WISE OLD cat arched his back and yawned. Something had awakened him from his cat-nap...what was it, now? Oh, there it was again, that pitiful cry coming from somewhere in the alley. "I'll just take a look and see what's up," the wise old cat said, climbing from the fence and patrolling the alley.

"Oh, gosh! Golly, gee!" There was someone crying! "What'll I do?" the sad little voice mewled.

"Ah, there," said the wise old cat to the small, sobbing kitten he found huddled in the corner of the fence, "you're young Pointie Kitten, aren't you? What seems to be troubling you?"

"It's my baseball mitt! It was brand-new and a beauty and he took it away from me!" And again the kitten cried pitifully.

"Who took it away from you? And how?" demanded the wise old cat.

"It was that bulldog, Rough-house Maloney!" the kitten sobbed. "I was playin' with my mitt when he comes along an' grabs it out of my hand! I asked him to give it back, but he wouldn't! Instead, he grabs me by my ear and drags me all the way over to Googengoober's Grocery Store! Then he says to me, 'If ya give me any trouble, ya little bag o' mangey skin, I'll make ya inta...that!'"

"What was it?" the wise old cat asked.

"Something called..." the crying kitten stopped to think. "Something awful called...catsup!"

The wise old cat smiled. "And that scared you so much, you just let him walk away with your new mitt, eh? Well, don't worry, Pointie, I'll get your mitt back for you...at once!"

The little kitten listened gratefully, but he never believed a word of it! How could anyone, even the wise old cat, make a bully like Rough-house Maloney give up that beautiful mitt? No, no, he'd never see that mitt again, he thought while waiting for the return of the wise old cat.

One minute passed...two...three...four...five...

...And there was the wise old cat, grinning all over, coming towards him with...with the baseball mitt!

"Oh, thank you!" Pointie Kitten exclaimed, hugging the mitt.

"You're welcome," the wise old cat answered politely. "No trouble at all!"

There wasn't even a scratch on him, Pointie Kitten noted. Shyly, he asked, "If you don't mind telling me, how did you get him to give the mitt back?"

"Well," said the wise old cat, "I simply took a leaf out of that bully's book! I gave him some of the same medicine he gave you!"

"Like...?"

"When he refused to give me the mitt, I got hold of his ear and pulled him over to Googengoober's Grocery Store! Then I pulled him just a little bit further along the street. Then I told him if he didn't give back the mitt, all the alley cats would get together and make him into..." the wise old cat stopped and smiled. "What's next door to Googengoober's?" he asked.

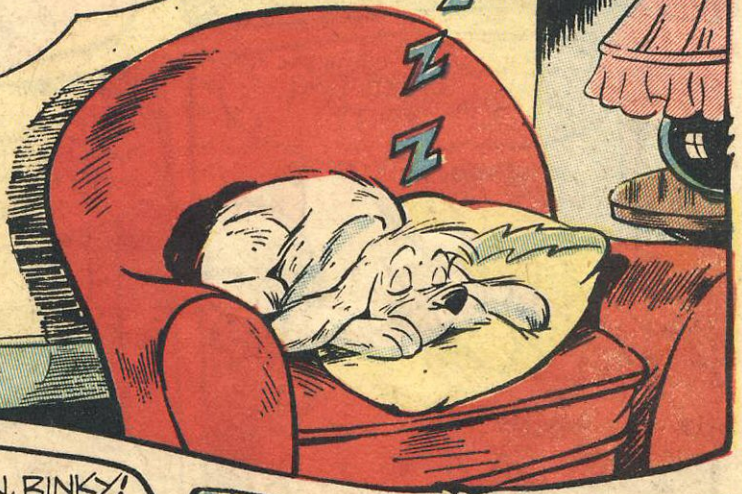

Pointie Kitten thought a bit and then he laughed out loud.

"Howie's hot-dog stand!" he exclaimed.
